AUSTRALIA

Located in Longford, one of Tasmania's oldest towns, this stunning Georgian coaching inn dates back to the 1860s. We loved the story behind the property which was originally constructed by convicts and remains steeped in history both inside and out. The five spacious rooms are furnished with antiques which evokes the sense of a bygone era. There are also en-suite facilities which have been carefully integrated so as to retain the historic atmosphere of the house. This charming ambience continues to the vaulted dining room which features an open fireplace and comfortable leather sofas where guests can enjoy a drink from the fully-licensed bar.

Hosts Annabelle and Richard guarantee exquisite service during a stay at Racecourse Inn, and take pride in using the freshest local ingredients in the preparation of the cooked and continental Tasmanian breakfasts, including eggs from their small flock of pedigree chickens. The English style cottage gardens are a true highlight of this bed and breakfast. Surrounded by hawthorn and privet hedges this garden is beautiful in all seasons and features an orchard of fruit trees and berries. We also loved the location of this property, which is a short drive from a number of UNESCO World Heritage Sites and the Tamar Valley wine region.
